

Punishment is an expressive social act, not primarily a tool for deterrence or reform.

Punishment reaffirms the collective conscience by publicly responding to moral violations.

